

The Royal Archaeological Institute

UNDERGRADUATE DISSERTATION PRIZE 2018

The Council of the Royal Archaeological Institute invites nominations from UK universities and colleges for its Undergraduate Dissertation Prize. This award runs in alternate years to our Master's Dissertation Prize and is an addition to the research activities we encourage and support.

In 2018, the RAI award will be for the best undergraduate dissertation written in 2017 or 2018 on archaeology or architectural history of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and other countries. The winner will receive a prize of £500, one year's Ordinary membership and the opportunity for a paper based on the dissertation to be published in the Archaeological Journal. The chief criteria considered are (a) quality of work and (b) appropriateness to the interests of the RAI as reflected in the Journal. The award will be presented at a London meeting of the Royal Archaeological Institute on 12 December 2018.

University and college departments are invited to submit no more than one dissertation by the 31st July 2018, although earlier submissions would be appreciated. In cases where an institution has more than one department teaching in the areas covered, each may make a separate entry, but a single selected entry would be preferred.

Dissertations which have been submitted for publication in another journal will not be eligible for consideration. Only a dissertation already submitted for an undergraduate degree in 2017 and 2018 will be considered. The best dissertation from those years may be put forward.

An electronic copy of the dissertation should accompany the completed form.

Queries concerning the competition may be sent to the Institute's Administrator at: admin@royalarchinst.org.
